By H. B. Martin. THE TRUE SECRET OF MARRIED HAPPINESS.

By Helen Oldfield.

HE secret of true marriage lies in similarity of taste, agreement of character, sympathy of spirit and harmony in disposition. To these must be added strong personal attraction, when there results the sincere and permanent love which blends heart and soul so that "they twain sheet by one lesh"

A man should not only love his wife dearly, but he should tell her that he loves her, and that often. The once-for-all plan is not one which appeals to woman in general. It is a feminine quirk to love to be made love to, the more the better; to object to taking affection for granted. A man is too ant to think that the mere fact of his marrying a woman ought to convince her of his love for her henceforth and forever. On the contrary, she likes to have his continual assurance that there never was and never could be any other woman in the pare with her in his eyes.

fices are absolutely essential to the happiness of married life. There must be a continual giving up of one's own will to that of another, thought for another rather than for one's self.

Be not quick to take offense, neither in haste to tell unpleasant truths. Silence is not necessarily untruth, and a sharp tongue is sure to stir up strife. It is the part of discretion to be "more than kind" to the virtues of those with whom one is associated in one's daily life; it is also wise to be "a little blind" to their familts when it is possible not to notice them, ears Helen Oldfield in the Chicago

What a man most desires in a home is comfort. Many a one has married housekeeper, induced thereto solely by the fact that she understood how to make him thoroughly comfortable, and did so. The woman who is always careful of a man's comforts becomes in time necessary to him.

Children should draw the parents more closely together and not raise the alightest barrier between them. For this cause the wife should be careful to let her husband understand that the baby is doubly dear to her because it is his, and never sayolide him to it excepting with his rull and free consect and co-operation. In short, the conclusion of the whole matter is that oneness in marriage consists largely in putting one's self in the place of another and in sharing
